Intraday Thoughts - Neutral-to-Slightly Bullish

USD/MYR opened 0.15% higher at 4.1425 and strengthened to 4.1443 at the point of writing. Daily outlook is neutral-to-slightly bullish amid broad USD strength this morning as sentiment turns cautious as traders await more concrete developments on the US-Iran peace talk. That said, the pair is overbought at this level and should head lower over the course of the week. The coming week brings the release of the US core PCE index for May as well as the preliminary S&P Global US PMIs for June, and nothing on the domestic front, save for political developments.

1-Month Outlook - USD/MYR Neutral

We are neutral on this pair on expectations that investors will stay cautious, waiting for concrete developments on the geopolitical front. Meanwhile, the neutral outlook for the pair will also be supported by expectations that the FOMC will maintain rates (if not tighten) at this level in the near term given that the economy is expanding at a still solid pace, while inflation remains elevated with the latest overrun largely underpinned by energy. In our opinion, persistence fear over inflation will likely keep the Dollar well supported amid a resilient labour market, but growth concerns could likely take centre stage later in the year in anticipation of squeezed corporate profits and consumer spending following the recent run-up in energy prices. On the domestic front, BNM maintained a neutral stance in its latest policy statement, while acknowledging increased risks from the Middle-east conflict. The neutral statement, coupled with BNM’s expectation for continued moderate growth (2026: 4.0-5.0%) and benign price outlook (2026: 1.5-2.5%), reinforced our view for an extended OPR pause this year.
